

G. David Miller has been an international development practitioner for over 55 years working in at least 30 countries throughout Africa and the Middle East. He was a Peace Corps Volunteer in Morocco, PC Program Officer in Afghanistan and PC Director in Tunisia. He served as Program Officer in the Near East Bureau of USAID working mainly in Lebanon, Egypt and Tunisia. He then left to become Vice President for Programs with Save the Children. In 1986 he founded and directed the Master's Degree Program in International Community Economic Development at Southern New Hampshire University where he served as Associate Professor for 24 years. Graduates of that program have assumed leadership positions in countries all over the globe. During that time he brought the program to the Open University of Tanzania thereby offering the ICED Master's Degree from SNHU to students attending from throughout East Africa.. Many African leaders have been recipients of that degree including the Vice President of Tanzania, VP of Kenya, the Kenyan Minister of Agriculture, and the President of the Diamond Board of South Africa In 2009 he joined the faculty of the University of California at Davis where he is the founding Director of the Research Innovations Fellowship in Agriculture (RIFA) program that has built a global network with more than 110 mid-career graduate level scholar/practitioners that work under the mentorship of faculty of all ten UC campuses to take research to action in over 30 countries